

Why do editorial and peer review services matter?

We asked our experts and partners why they believe editorial and peer review services are important for success. They shared the benefits of improving operations, managing gaps, establishing more efficient workflows, and supporting their teams. Here is what they told us:

“ Editorial and peer review services play a crucial role in complementing the work of editors and editorial boards. They support publishing excellence and innovation, significantly contribute to author and reviewer satisfaction, and ultimately create a positive experience for both the journal and the Society's brand. ”

- Thomas Reiser, International Society on Thrombosis and Haemostasis (ISTH)

“ As a smaller journal, knowing that we always have quality editorial expertise is key to our success. The team provides excellent interim support when our managing editor is away, keeping our operation seamless and timely. Our Wiley managing editor also partners in communications with our professional association, which is critical as a society journal. I can not imagine doing our work any other way. ”

- Dr. Melissa Avery, PhD, CNM, FACNM, FAAN - Journal of Midwifery & Women's Health

Wiley Publishing Services

Transform your publishing experience from start to finish with our expert consultants. Focus on your authors, staff, and volunteers by integrating best practices with help from Wiley.

80

Editorial and Peer Review Services
customers

16

years' experience
supporting partners

1731

professional development hours in the past year

Editorial and peer review services:

- Improve the author experience
- Scale publishing operations
- Implement the highest standards of research integrity

“The recent focus on rigor and reproducibility of research, along with a growing number of tools to address this, has dramatically increased the effort and complexity of the peer review process. Having trained and experienced staff supporting our editors is absolutely crucial to our success. Editorial staff with a customer service-oriented attitude is just as important, as we juggle the contributions of overworked authors, reviewers, and editors.”

- Sarah McCormack, American Society for Nutrition

“Our editorial and peer review services are designed so that our talented and professional staff become an extension of our customers' internal teams. We contribute to the goals of the editors, editorial boards, and societies we work with so that we can ensure the best peer review process for authors, uphold industry standards for research integrity, and support growth goals for the journal. When we partner with our customers to achieve these objectives, we support their mission to drive research and education in their fields that result in real world outcomes to improve society.”

- Brittany Swett, Wiley Partner Solutions