

How Proficient Are Your Nurses?

Are your nurses proficient in the four areas of practice? Discover the resources they need to develop the skills and knowledge.

01 Managing the patient journey

From admissions to discharge, managing a patient's health journey is a top priority. Ensure patients get the care they need by providing the latest information on topics like:

- Respiratory, cardiovascular, and abdominal examinations
- Dealing with a delayed discharge
- Discharge against medical advice
- Readmission after discharge
- Discharging to a nursing home

02 Supporting the patient with human functioning

Clear communication and unparalleled knowledge are keys to positive patient outcomes. Keep your nurses' knowledge up to date on best practices for:

- Communication, psychological wellbeing, and safeguarding
- Moving and positioning
- Pain assessment and management
- Symptom control and care towards the end of life
- Respiratory care, CPR, and blood transfusion

03 Supporting the patient through the diagnostic process

Getting patients the right diagnosis quickly the first time can be done if a practitioner is thoroughly versed in the latest diagnostic procedures, such as:

- Lumbar puncture
- Blood cultures
- Sputum sampling
- Blood glucose monitoring
- Neurological observations and assessment

04 Supporting the patient with human functioning

With medication errors among the top mistakes nurses make, it's essential nurses follow proper procedures for:

- Controlled drug administration
- Measuring and applying antiembolic stockings
- Caring for the patient in the anaesthetic room
- Operating theatre procedure: maintaining the safety of a patient during surgery
- Safe management of patients in the post-operative care unit

Your nurses are the on the frontlines of patient care. Make sure your nursing staff stay up to date on the latest best practices in nursing by providing them access to The Royal Marsden Manual of Clinical Nursing Procedures. This widely respected manual, which outlines over 250 procedures and practices, is the all-in-one resource they need to stay on the cutting edge of the nursing field.
